Sacred Spaces: A Journey With The Sufis Of The Indus (Peabody Museum)

Synopsis

Sufism, the mystical path of Islam, is a key feature of the complex Islamic culture of South Asia today. Influenced by philosophies and traditions from other Muslim lands and by pre-Islamic rites and practices, Sufism offers a corrective to the image of Islam as monolithic and uniform. In Sacred Spaces, Pakistani artist and educator Samina Quraeshi provides a locally inflected vision of Islam in South Asia that is enriched by art and by a female perspective on the diversity of Islamic expressions of faith. A unique account of a journey through the author's childhood homeland in search of the wisdom of the Sufis, the book reveals the deeply spiritual nature of major centers of Sufism in the central and northwestern heartlands of South Asia. Illuminating essays by Ali S. Asani, Carl W. Ernst, and Kamil Khan Mumtaz provide context to the journey, discussing aspects of Sufi music and dance, the role of Sufism in current South Asian culture and politics, and the spiritual geometry of Sufi architecture. Quraeshi relies on memory, storytelling, and image making to create an imaginative personal history using a rich body of photographs and works of art to reflect the seeking heart of the Sufi way and to demonstrate the diversity of this global religion. Her vision builds on the centuries-old Sufi tradition of mystical messages of love, freedom, and tolerance that continue to offer the promise of building cultural and spiritual bridges between peoples of different faiths.

In the 1960s, the author Samina Quraeshi recalls, religious tolerance was the norm in Pakistan, with Sufi spirit permeating the region. Her Muslim family had Christian, Hindu, Zoroastrian, and Jewish friends, and she even went to a Catholic missionary school. As we all know, conservative zealots are on the rise around North Africa and the Middle East, and Sufi shrines and Christian churches have been destroyed, along with the great Buddha monuments in Afghanistan. Thus, she had returned to her homeland to document by photography, personal encounters, and historic lore about Sufi saints before Sufism is suppressed or forced into low profile, as had occurred in Turkey last century. In this effort, she enlisted three academic experts to contribute chapters on Sufism and Islam in South Asia (Ali S. Asani and Carl W. Ernst) and on the architecture of Sufi shrines (Kamil Khan Mumtaz). This last essay was especially interesting, as while plans of a cube and dome with intermediate octagons, based on proportions and geometry, may be approved, construction is actually more an organic process than a mechanical assembly, filled with serendipitous modifications and adjustments. The simple exteriors of brick are found inside to be geometric wonders of wood, paint, and tile and calligraphic design. This handsome book grew out of an exhibit at the Peabody Museum of Harvard University. Color photographs of towns, streets, shrines, and portraits of people taken mainly by Quraeshi fill the pages, which is appropriate as the bright, solid colors of clothing and decoration, the reds and blues with green and black and turquoise, dazzle the eye. Other images are illustrations from ancient books. The reader can attain some feeling of Pakistan's architecture and its peoples.
